Alice Reimer

My childhood involved going to church faithfully every week. The church history where my family attended included a time when the church preached the Word accurately and completely. However, each time church mergers occurred a more liberal church denomination took the helm. Praise God, His Word does not return onto Him void. My Sunday school teachers faithfully presented the Bible lessons each week. Unfortunately, the meaning of Christ's total work was lacking in the Sunday school lessons and sermons. I received in an incomplete Gospel. My parents both received Christ as their Savior in their youth. They themselves never grew deep in their relationship to Christ. Thus, my parents felt no need to share the Gospel with my siblings and me.

Bible Study was lacking in the church body as well with my parents. My father, while growing up, faithfully watched Billy Graham Crusades. I often watched the crusades as well but did not understand what being born again meant. During my high school years, several friends became born again. They presented the gospel, it took several years before I made a decision for Christ. I followed the ways of my parents and went to church faithfully and did not study my Bible. Many years followed before studying God's Word became a priority. My life showed my lack of adhering to the Word of God, which I regret. Studying the Word of God slowly transferred my priorities and my behavior. What a thrill to minister over the years in Awana, fair outreaches, and on the missions board of my previous church.

God is so full of grace and compassion to His children.
